TitleoftheEvent-

“KHUDA,KHADYO O DEVI”

Objectives:

It is a basic human right to want and be able to eat. Man can never survive without food. And the main purpose of our discussion is to present to the students and the society how the gods are connected with this food.

In the course of time, the medieval period is no exception in the case of Bengali literature, behind the veil of so-called miracles, in the context of social, economic and political maps, there is an instinctive appeal to quench the petty thirst.

As the idea of the goddess is not merely a criterion of the supernatural, the speaker seeks to cast a somatic dark light on our psychological research - the clash of two alien class consciousness, the powerful and the powerless respectively.

The purpose of the speakers was to deconstruct the Lokayat myth in the context of contemporaneity or perpetuity.

DescriptionofEvent:

A state level networked discussion cycle was organized in our college on 24/08/2020 under the initiative of the Bengali department and IQSE. The subjects were hunger, food and goddesses. Dr. Seema Chakraborty, Principal of our college, Dr. Tapan Kumar Chand, convener of IQSE, Dr. Anindita Chakraborty, convener of Study Circle and Dr. Prosenjit Bose were the keynote speakers. The whole program was conducted by Dr. Gobindo Mondal, Head of the Bengali department.

The speaker did not imprison the old idol from the vault of time only in the vestibule of the medieval religious circle. They moved the time towards the estuaries of the inevitable religious source of the past recipient of much of that time. Searching for the source of the main statement, Adya Stotra and Devi Chandi's philosophy broke the folds of the verse and brought it into the circle of two unmistakable words, hunger and thirst. Along with that, through the process of fulfillment of hunger and thirst, the speech reached a different dimension in the worldly inevitability of food to the original energy.
